

My name is Raunak Mondal and the book I'm going to talk about is called Paper Towns by John Green. Paper Towns revolves around Winter Park High School and its seniors. The main character of Paper Towns is Quentin Jacobsen, who goes on a trip one night with Margo Roth Spiegelman and destroys the homes of many of her "enemies". After that, Margo goes on an adventure in another state, leaving her parents clueless. As a result, her parents file a report that claims that Margo is an adult, saying that they don't need her. Margo doesn't come back home until the end of the story.

The title of the book, Paper Towns, connects to the story because Margo repeatedly throughout the story says that Orlando, the setting of the book, is a "paper town". Specifically, Margo thinks that Orlando is a paper town because she thinks that everything in Orlando is fake, paper-thin, and paper-frail. Another reason why she thinks that Orlando is a paper town is that everyone in Orlando, in her point of view, is materialistic and doesn't care about anything that really matters.
